Excerpt: ...distance,; and the statues of the pontiffs, which adorn their tombs,,distributed2 in the lateral naveS, scarcely2 gleamed out,, and broke,the shades2 only orf/., in the places where the light of the fiery cross did not penetrate. An infinite number of foreigners of every age, (y) sex and religion crowded into the temple, delighting in that wonderful spectacle,,though3 bearing2 little, Pabout the reverence due to the mdwelling of the Eternal One. Rome was dIever2 renowned, for the pomp of its ceremonies; but I dare assert that in certain of them,,the royal decorum and the true dignity of the liturgy2 have been sacrificed to external sshow,. But if ,,on Good Friday, on the very day () consecrated to the memory of the Redeemer, the first church of Rome offers to the curious a scene of dissipation, k,still there generally2 reignS, a dignified silence4 in that august rtemple3. It is then that (?) the sentiments,which accompany a religious abstraction are blended with those2 of admiration,: and, the prayer which2 prises to the Eternal4 among the splendid and silent walls of Saint Peters3is more energetic and humble2. THE EMPEROR FREDERIC BARBAROSSA AND POPE ALEXANDER III. Let us enter () the most magnificent hall of the palace in which,the bGreat Council, or all the cVenetian nobility2 dused to meet,. eOn first facing it and (e) discovering that immense space included between sthe vaulted roof and the walls, all shining with gold, all covered with paintings, the first sensation felt, is hprofound astonishment, which then ksubsides2 by degrees, as we begin to consider leisurely and with order, the prodigies of the...
