----- SUMMARY : During the Renaissance Venice was the strongest and the biggest trading Power in the Mediterranean. From the 14th to the 16th centuries it dominated the Mediterranean Sea almost from edge to edge. The organization of its commercial fleet was ideal and obeyed to practices and strict rules implemented throughout the state without any exception, even to the outmost remote Greek-Venetian small dominions of the far Greek East Aegean Sea. This paper presents briefly and concisely the most important features of the Venetian trade of this period.
