

Excerpt from The Soviet System at Work In writing a foreword to the series of four articles which have appeared in the Daily Herald, but which should have appeared in the Daily Mail, I have to explain how the latter journal refused to print what they had asked for from me, namely, my experiences and observations. A few days before leaving London for Russia, I was told by a regular contributor to the Mail that that paper was anxious that some member of the delegation, preferably myself, should agree to contribute a series of articles upon the return of the delegation. I was asked to see Mr. Valentine Williams, the Foreign Editor, with a view to determining certain points which required to be made clear. I suggested that they knew my views very well, and that I wanted a free hand to say exactly what I thought required saying regarding Soviet structure of government or anything else with which I required to deal.
